

She doesn't just wear the shirt.

My name is Deelia Warner. I'm a business banker, community volunteer and most importantly, a mom.

I grew up in a small rural town and learned early on that life could be hard. Families I knew lost their homes in fires; friends lost their dads in logging accidents. I also learned that my little town would band together during those times of crisis to take care of each other.

My very first volunteer activity was to help gather canned foods for families that had been evacuated from their homes during a winter of terrible floods. I was in first grade.

Now, many years later, my family and I once again live in my small hometown, where I volunteer in the schools my children attend. I have taught personal finance and world trade to kids who have never left the county we live in. I have fundraised for our local health care clinic. My children and I have packed food boxes for Christmas.

I believe my most important role in life is to teach my children, their friends, and maybe their families, that it's important to share what we have. To share our time, our knowledge, and our resources. Because we all live here, together. It's about community.

My name is Deelia Warner. And, I don't just wear the shirt, I live it.
